HOW THE FOUR MODES WORK

SOLO

You and Claude, working through the day's artefacts at your own pace.

The whole room: one teaching point, then something hands-on.

Away from the room, talking to real customers or prospects.

Ten to twenty minutes with Seb, on the calls that matter most.

09:00-09:10

👤 TOGETHER

Morning huddle: today's number

Before anything else, say today's number out loud to the room. Not a vibe, a number: a count, a deadline, a decision you'll have made by 5pm.

A good number

- "8 interviews booked and run."
- "A validated problem by 5pm."

Not a number

- "Make progress on the idea."
- "See how the interviews go."

09:10-10:40

SOLO

Develop your idea with Claude

This afternoon's interviews test a bet, and the bet has to be genuinely yours. A brief you merely nodded at will not survive contact with a real customer; one you talked into existence will.

WHAT WE'RE AFTER

- Where the idea came from
- What you believe, and the bet underneath it
- Whose problem it is, named
- One sentence: [product] helps [who] do [job] so they [get outcome]

Ends with an idea brief written in your own words, not Claude's.

SOLO

Plan today's interviews

Ten minutes per booked name turns a diary of calls into a test of your riskiest assumption.

FOR EVERY NAME ON TODAY'S LIST

- Who they are, and why they're worth 25 minutes
- When their slot is, and how you're reaching them
- The one thing this specific call has to test

11:25-12:00

SOLO

Write your interview script

A question in your own voice survives a nervous first call; a perfect one in someone else's does not.

- Eight or more questions that can't be flattered
- A guide for running, recording and transcribing the call
- Practised out loud before the first real one

12:00-12:40

👤 TOGETHER

The Mom Test

Ask your mum if your idea is good and she'll say yes, because she loves you and doesn't want to see you disappointed. Everyone does this. Ask a stranger a nice open question about your idea and you get the same encouragement, not the truth.

THE FIX

Stop asking for opinions about the future. Ask about specifics from the past. What someone did last week is real data. What someone thinks they might do next month is fiction, even when they mean it.

The one rule

If your question could be answered with a compliment, it's the wrong question.

12:00-12:40

👥 TOGETHER

Three rules, in practice

01 Talk about their life, not your idea

Don't describe what you're building until the very end, if at all. Ask what a normal week looks like for them. The idea only comes up if they ask.

02 Ask about specifics in the past

Not “would you”, not “do you think”. Ask what they actually did the last time this came up, and when that was.

03 Talk less, listen more

Every minute you're talking is a minute you're not learning anything. Aim for 80% them, 20% you.

12:00-12:40

👥 TOGETHER

Turn a bad question into a good one

CLICK A CARD TO SEE THE FIX

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

“Do you think this is a good idea?”

TRY INSTEAD

“What do you currently do about this?”

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

“Would you pay for something like this?”

TRY INSTEAD

“What have you paid for, or tried, to solve this before?”

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

“Would you use a tool that did X?”

TRY INSTEAD

“Talk me through the last time this happened to you.”

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

“How much would you pay for this?”

TRY INSTEAD

“What is this costing you today, in time or money?”

12:00-12:40

👥 TOGETHER

What it sounds like

A 90-SECOND EXCHANGE

FOUNDER GOOD MOVE

Talk me through the last time you had to chase up an overdue invoice.

CUSTOMER

Oh, last Tuesday actually. I spent about 40 minutes on the phone, then had to email our accountant to check what we'd already sent.

FOUNDER GOOD MOVE

What have you tried, to make that faster?

CUSTOMER

Honestly, nothing that's stuck. We tried a spreadsheet reminder system but nobody keeps it updated.

FOUNDER, TEMPTING, BUT DON'T AVOID

"Would you use an app that automated that for you?"

12:00-12:40

👥 TOGETHER

Then: 30-second pitch round

Group Whole room, standing or seated in a circle

Bring A phone timer, nothing else

Time ~15 minutes for 8-12 people

Each turn One founder stands. 30 seconds on the visible timer. No notes, no slides.

0:30 Timer goes off mid-sentence if it has to. That's the point, it forces the essential version.

+15s The room gives one honest reaction, one sentence, no discussion.

Repeat Next founder goes. Keep the pace brisk, don't let it drift into Q&A.

DEBRIEF

What changed when you heard yourself say it out loud, instead of just thinking it?

12:40-13:20

Lunch

Back at 13:20

13:20-16:20

🔗 OUT

Your booked customer interviews

Run every booked slot against the script. Listen more than you talk, and write down their exact words, not your summary of them.

- One record per session, logged as it happens
- Their words verbatim, especially the ones that surprise you
- If a call runs short, use the time to write up the last one

The interviews matter more than the day.

Break

16:35-17:05

∞ 1:1

Find the patterns, make the call

This is the week's biggest decision: everything after today points at whatever you lock here, so a fuzzy problem now means you cannot close on Friday.

01

Find the pattern

The same pain, in the same words, from people who don't know each other.

02

Name the segment

Not "everyone", a specific group who feel this hardest.

03

Make the call

Persevere, pivot, or not enough evidence yet. Say it out loud with Seb.

Evening close

01

State the number: how many interviews, what you heard

02

Name the call: persevere, pivot, or not enough evidence yet

03

Write it down, so tomorrow starts from truth, not memory

Say it out loud before you test it on a stranger.
