DAY 2 · TUESDAY

Own your corner

By tonight: your positioning, your proposition, your brand and a 12-slide pitch deck.

👤 TOGETHER

Morning huddle

Same ritual as yesterday: say today's number out loud. Today it's likely a deliverable, not a count, “a 12-slide pitch deck by 5pm”, or “my positioning statement, defended.”

09:10-10:10

SOLO

Map the market, scan the competition, size it

Market map

Draw the board first: segments, value chain, named incumbents, substitutes.

Competitor scan

Six or more real rivals, scored, ending on the sentence naming the gap you own.

Market sizing

TAM, SAM, SOM, worked two independent ways and checked against each other.

Fix your positioning

Bring your market map and your draft statement. Seb's job in this hour is to find the sentence where you're hedging, and make you commit.

- Which corner of the market you're actually fighting for
- Who you're happy to lose to
- The one claim no rival can honestly make

11:25-12:00

👥 TOGETHER

Positioning in one sentence

Positioning is the one decision that makes every later decision easier: it tells Wednesday what to build, Thursday what to say, and Friday why a prospect pays you and not the incumbent.

THE TRAP

Most founders position for everyone, because narrowing feels like losing customers. It's the opposite: a founder who obviously serves someone beats a founder who vaguely serves everyone.

11:25-12:00

👥 TOGETHER

The positioning statement

For [target customer] who [has this need], [product] is a [market category] that [key benefit]. Unlike [main alternative], we [real difference].

WORKED EXAMPLE

For Jersey trust companies drowning in manual compliance checks, Harbour is a compliance automation tool that cuts review time from days to hours. Unlike a generalist consultancy, we ship working software in the first week.

11:25-12:00

👥 TOGETHER

The 2x2 map, step by step

01 Pick two axes that matter to the buyer

Not the two you're best at. The two things a buyer actually weighs up: price vs speed, generalist vs specialist, self-serve vs done-for-you.

02 Plot yourself, honestly

Where you are today, not where you'll be in a year.

03 Plot three or four real rivals

Including whatever your customer copes with instead of buying anything: a spreadsheet, a generalist, doing it by hand.

04 Find the open corner

The quadrant with nobody in it, and a real buyer in it too. That's your corner.

11:25-12:00

👥 TOGETHER

What a plotted 2x2 looks like

Illustrative example, plot your own on the wall

11:25-12:00

👥 TOGETHER

Common mistakes

CLICK A CARD TO SEE THE FIX

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

Both axes are about you: fast, cheap, easy

TRY INSTEAD

Pick axes the buyer already argues about among themselves.

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

You're plotted in the same spot as everyone else

TRY INSTEAD

If you can't draw a line between you and a rival, you haven't positioned yet, you've described a category.

CLICK TO SEE THE FIX

The open corner has no buyers in it

TRY INSTEAD

An empty corner with no demand isn't a strategy, it's a warning.

11:25-12:00

👥 TOGETHER

Then: wall gallery walk

Group Whole room, standing

Bring Your printed or drawn 2x2, tape or pins

Time ~10 minutes

0:00 Pin your 2x2 to the wall. Two minutes, no talking yet.

2:00 Silent walk. Everyone reads everyone else's map. No commentary.

7:00 Group debrief: who else is standing in your open corner?

DEBRIEF

If someone else plotted themselves in your open corner, which of you is wrong?

12:00-12:45

Lunch

Back at 12:45

12:45-13:15

SOLO

Craft your proposition

A proposition is a promise you can prove: get it right and Wednesday knows what to build, and Friday's pricing has a number to anchor to.

- One sentence a stranger understands first time
- The one number your customer needs to move

13:15-13:30

SOLO

Write your messaging

People buy the sentence they can repeat to someone else.

D2-MESSAGING

- One line
- Three proof-backed messages
- A 30-second pitch

13:30-14:00

SOLO

Brand foundations

Decide once how you sound and what you stand for, and every email, page and pitch downstream sounds like the same firm.

- 3 to 5 values
- One archetype
- A tone rated on 4 dimensions
- A resolved name, or a shortlist

14:00-15:00

SOLO

Visual identity

This settles how you look in under an hour, not a fortnight, and because you chose each piece yourself, you can defend it to anyone.

- Three genuinely different logo concepts, pick one and refine it twice
- One of three font pairings
- A five-colour AA-safe palette

15:00-15:15

Break

Back at 15:15

15:15-15:45

SOLO

Brand book and pitch deck assembled

Brand book and pitch deck

A brand that lives in one founder's head dies at the first freelancer. The brand book is the handover; the pitch deck is tonight's homework.

15:45-17:00

∞ 1:1

Deck review

Seb reads your 12 slides as a stranger would: no context, no goodwill. If a slide needs you in the room to make sense, it gets cut or rewritten.

- The story holds without narration
- Every claim has a number or a quote behind it
- The ask on the last slide is unmissable

Evening close

01

Say your positioning statement out loud, once, without notes

02

Send the pitch deck to every founder tonight

03

Bring the brand board tomorrow, Wednesday builds against it

The 2x2 tells you who you're really up against.
